In recent correspondence, Bishop Deenihan has advised that our current parochial structures with its multiplicity of churches and Masses is no longer sustainable. He points out that there are very many priests in Meath diocese in their late seventies, eighties and nineties serving in parishes, who are long over the normal age of retirement for people in their ordinary everyday roles. In addition, there are currently over 20 priests serving in the diocese from abroad who can be recalled at any time to their own respective places. The bishop advises that we cannot continue to allow energies to be diverted from the essential work of ministry, pastoral care and evangelisation. There are many changes afoot
